GERMAN LOVERS .- "The universal prudery," says Mr. Brace in his Home Life in Ger-many, "which so hampers a man in America, and makes him ignore half the facts of life, for fear of treading on some unknown delicate sonsibility, is never seen in European circles. It is boldly assumed, what every one knows to be a fact , that both sexes are equally aware of a great variety of things; and where the allusion is natural, no one troubles himself about it. There were in our company, this evening, two who were invited as betrothed, and I was very much struck with their man-ners towards one another. I think in an An-en o'clock. You never thought of watching them for it, but you never thought of any thing else with them. Love seemed to speak out as naturally from their tones, and glance, and manner, as friendly feeling did with us. Nothing else would have seemed in place. It was above criticism -above sursprise, even-though if any other of the young men were bachelors like myself, they retired with sufficiently vivid appreciation of the work of bachelordom. I often have observed this naturalness of expression among the Germans. It is more apparent in the families, of course. It was, I think, the Salt Rheum, which was of the very worst form, it destroyed her health, strength and appetite. She had used various remedies in vain.
